INVESTMENT OBJECTIVE

To achieve capital appreciation on an absolute and relative basis over the medium to long-term horizon through investment in Swiss equities with a focus on innovative companies that are leaders in their markets.

PORTFOLIO REVIEW

Financial markets treaded more cautiously in February, with investors trying to balance several sources of uncertainty. Questions surrounding the valuation and monetisation of artificial intelligence rekindled volatility in some technology names, notably within the software segment, which weighed on US equity indices. Meanwhile, geopolitical tensions in the Middle East, discussions regarding new tariff measures and signs of persistent inflation contributed to maintaining a more hesitant market sentiment.

Against this backdrop, the Swiss market stood out positively, gaining 5.7% over the month, supported notably by large-cap names and the more defensive profile of Swiss equities. Investors favoured companies perceived as more resilient in an uncertain environment. Also underway is a marked sector rotation towards some more cyclical and industrial segments, sometimes referred to as "old economy". After several years of outperformance by so-called "asset light" business models, investors seem to be rediscovering the appeal of companies that own significant industrial assets, particularly in sectors related to energy, infrastructure and manufacturing. This trend also reflects the current economic priorities of governments, focused more on energy, industrial and strategic security than on solely optimising economic efficiency.

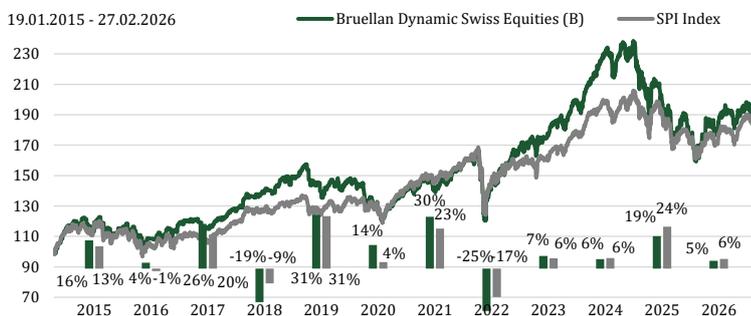

In this mixed environment, the Bruellan Dynamic Swiss Fund closed the month up 4.7%, slightly underperforming its benchmark index. This relative underperformance is attributable in part to the fund's underweight exposure to large defensive stocks, which were the main Swiss market performance drivers during the month.

Some of the fund's holdings also weighed on performance, notably Belimo and Partners Group. In the case of Belimo, the stock took a hit after the publication of results deemed disappointing by the market. Partners Group, for its part, suffered from renewed concerns surrounding the private equity sector, particularly private debt. Several recent studies have highlighted the risk of an increase in defaults in this segment should certain software companies, largely financed by these players, be rapidly disrupted by the emergence of artificial intelligence. Although such scenarios remain theoretical for the time being, they have contributed to weighing on the short-term perception of the sector.

Several adjustments were made to the portfolio during the month. The Flughafen Zürich and Swiss Life holdings were sold, while new positions were initiated in UBS, Gurit and Komax.

On a final note, Sandoz rebounded significantly following the publication of solid results for the 2025 financial year. Sales rose 6% at constant exchange rates in the fourth quarter, driven by volume growth and the strength of the biosimilars segment, where sales were up by 16%. The core EBITDA margin reached 21.7%, while earnings per share exceeded expectations, thanks in particular to a favourable tax rate. 2026 guidance, which forecasts mid- to high-single digit revenue growth and margin improvement of ca. 100 basis points, also reassured the market. Beyond the current momentum, the biosimilars pipeline is a structural growth driver still largely underestimated by investors.
